Hello,

My name is Christie Goshe and I live in NE Portland in the King/Sabin/Irvington neighborhood. I'm writing to express my support for House Bill 2138, which will help ease Oregon's housing shortage by legalizing more housing on existing land in communities that could be built with more density.

Oregon and Portland (along with most cities) are in dire need of more housing to address myriad crises. In Portland specifically, we're facing a lack of middle housing and natural (or inclusionary) affordable housing in areas that are economic drivers. More people are being pushed out to suburbs and exurbs - and that puts more and more reliance on Portland's aging transportation infrastructure. PBOT is in the midst of budget shortfall to address all the deferred maintenance that has accrued over the years. What we need to remove barriers to denser and closer development to allow citizens to live near where they work - in established areas that are also their own livable micro-economies. We need four floors and a corner store on those main thoroughfares where people can work and live with less reliance on long commutes - and to let the pressure off on the tight housing market we find ourselves in today - as well as help remove the onerous financial need the State and City requires to support sprawl.

I also urge the committee to retain SECTION 22. (1), which removes the demolition review requirement for "contributing" houses in National Register Historic Districts. Unlike local historic districts with democratic oversight, these districts are controlled by landowners and limit cities' ability to address the housing crisis. This bill preserves local historic protections while giving cities the flexibility to build much-needed housing. We cannot allow historic districts to be wielded to protect wealthier neighborhoods that seek to freeze those neighborhoods in a state that does not meet the needs of Oregonians old and new. A static city is a dying city. We must let our cities change and grow densely in every neighborhood; this prevents sudden intensification of development and the resulting alienating gentrification that tends predominately affect low-income communities and communities of color.

Thank you.
